

New York's Greeting to Heir to British Throne

City Greeted British Prince
And Makes Him a Citizen

caught sight of the be-decked car in which the prince rode, with the royal standard of red, gold and blue fluttering in the wind of its passing, the valley seemed filled to the brim with sound.

A roar of voices that could almost be felt rose and scaled higher and then clung to a shrill hysterical pitch as the prince rode by behind the glittering bayonets of his escort. From skyscrapers paper scraps fell like blinding snow squalls. Ticker tape was tossed from high windows and fluttered down through the quivering air.

For a moment the lad, who had been listening to little else but greetings for the last two months, seemed dazed by the welcome New York was giving him. The hands ahead of him waved manfully; they could not be heard.

Saluted by Police
Presently the very force of the racket seemed to draw the prince from his seat. For the rest of his journey to the City Hall he stood, his hand fluttering again and again to the gold embroidered visor of his cap.

City Hall Park was set in a heavy frame of massed humanity as the cars of the welcoming party drove into the space kept clear in front of the hall itself. The police who guarded the steps came to salute as the prince jumped from his car and walked briskly up toward the portal. He grinned in a friendly fashion in the face of each rigid policeman and returned every salute scrupulously.

In the Aldermanic Chamber all benches had been cleared away; a green carpet had been spread and the front of the gallery and the space behind the dais at the further end of the room were decorated with flags of America, Britain and the city.

There was a rattle of applause and a short burst of cheering as the prince entered, surrounded by officers and followed by members of the reception committee. On the dais he stood between Mayor Hylan and Rodman Wanamaker.

Made Citizen of New York

He was evidently nervous. His sleek head turned from one to the other of his sponsors; his slender hands were continually in motion, gripping each other, fumbling with the gleaming buttons of his uniform.

The Mayor intoned his address, in which he told the prince what America had done in the war, of the greatness of New York City, and of his pleasure in welcoming him. He then gave the prince the parchment bestowing upon him the rank of a citizen of New York.

Rodman Wanamaker and Secretary of State Hughes also spoke brief words of greeting, and then the prince replied. His voice was light, almost childish, but clear and true. With his fair face flushed and his slight, slender manner, he looked rather like a little boy speaking at school exercises.

But the appeal of his manner caught the hearts of the crowd. Whenever he paused for breath they yelled approval. It was not so much what he said. They liked him and they wanted to show their liking.

Cautel for Reception
He told of his satisfaction at being made a freeman of New York City, and of his gratitude for the reception accorded him.

"Now that I'm here," he said, "and I have looked forward to coming for some time, I find that I like the United States even better than I had anticipated, and I know that I was going to like it very much indeed."

At the end of his address he ducked his head in a shy bow and looked down the dais through the lane made by the police in the cheering crowd.

Mayor Hylan delivered the chief address of welcome for the city. He said: "Your Royal Highness: As the chief executive of the City of New York it becomes my honorable and important function to come to you, your highness, to the metropolis of the Western world in harmony with the cordial reception accorded you at the capital of the nation by the President of the United States."

"New York has been singularly favored during recent days by the visits of many illustrious and heroic figures of the world war. Great Britain has been the common impulse to send your highness as her representative to these shores."

"Your visit to America at this time is in the interest of establishing permanent peace, a peace which will mean the prosperity and happiness of all nations, all races and every individual thereof. Those charged today with the grave responsibility of governing must assume the burden of working unselfishly and unreservedly for this common and humane ideal to which we dedicated ourselves during the past years."

"The City of New York recognizes in your person the distinguished representative of a people who, allied with other powers, fought in deadly struggle to vindicate the liberties of mankind. You have recognized the lofty principles that inspired America's action in entering the conflict and the mighty powers she put forth in responding to the call for men and arms in the darkest hour of the world's greatest war. We now have the opportunity to prove to posterity that we were influenced by no unworthy motives and that our cause was right and just."

New York's Part in War
"With great and heartfelt pride do we recall the prominent and effective part that the City of New York played in the titanic conflict, not only in contributing her sons to the fighting force and giving unstintingly of her other resources, but also harboring and shipping overseas the major part of our American troops."

"We recall, too, with grateful hearts the thrilling story of the soldier boys of this great city who were among the first to meet the onswelling enemy hosts when they pushed beyond the Marne and not only halted that terrific assault, but drove the enemy back across that historic battle line and paved the way for the decisive and victorious offensive directed by the incomparable Foch."

"May we not hope that all that has been done during the war by every section of this country will make our ideals better appreciated and give assurance to all peoples, great and small, that this nation holds hatred none but desires friendship with all, to the end that liberty, charity, justice, self-government and self-determination will prevail throughout the world?"

Mayor Hylan presented to you the freedom of the greatest city of the wonder republic of the ages—a city which in an existence of less than three hundred years has risen to eminence among the municipalities of the world as the dynamic center of democracy—the all-American City of New York."

Wanamaker Presents Flag
Mr. Wanamaker addressed the Prince formally and brought the first mile to his face during the formal reception.

"It's been a great day and it is a wonderful reception the city has given its honored guest," he said. "We have seen what the young prince is made of, and we know that he is no tin soldier."

There was a cheer of agreement from the crowd that filled the Aldermanic Chambers at this sentiment. There was another cheer when Mr. Wanamaker produced a great silk flag and presented it to the prince.

Owing to the inability of Governor Smith to be present the state was represented by Secretary of State Francis M. Hughes. Addressing the prince, he said:

"Speaking for the Governor of the State of New York and through him, to the people of this largest American commonwealth, I have the honor to bid your royal highness a cordial welcome and to offer, on your behalf, the hospitality of the Empire State of the United States."

State's Part in War
"Nothing in the past century and a quarter has so tended to accentuate the bonds of sympathy and mutual interest that unite our kindred peoples as the recent world conflict, the anniversary of whose successful termination we jointly celebrated but a week ago, on Armistice Day. To this struggle for the triumph of our Anglo-Saxon liberties the State of New York was privileged to contribute 425,000 men, equivalent of twenty-eight British divisions, and our own New York National Guard, the 27th Division, had the honor of serving with your brilliant British legions in Northern France, in the common cause of humanity, resulting in the glorious victory of right over might."

"We welcome you as a comrade in arms, you who have but recently shared the dangers and trials of the Western battle front with the generals, subalterns and doughboys of our own American army."

Admired By U. S. Soldiers
"With cordiality and respectful courtesy we bid you welcome as the representative of that great nation that is so inextricably bound to us by ties of blood, language, tradition and mutual understanding, but even more than these, we are linked together by the same lofty ideals and aspirations, by the energetic impulse to make the most of our opportunities and by that innate love and reverence for law and order which lie at the very root of democracy."

"Our soldiers have come to admire you as you have mingled with them in the trenches, camps and billets on the other side, and since your short advent here we have been honored and won by the charm of your simple and unadorned personality. We greet you as though you were a fellow American, knowing that the Anglo-Saxons are the same world-wide, no matter under what nationality they may have lived or what geographical barriers separate them. And when you leave us we wish you a pleasant and prosperous voyage and a safe and happy return to your native land."

Taken Through Central Park
On leaving City Hall the prince once more was the good natured subject of another rush of thousands of men and women who sought to shake his hand, intercept a royal smile, or even plump him on the cheek.

Preceded by a body of motorcycle policemen, the party moved up Lafayette Street to Ninth Street, where it turned west to Fifth Avenue. The prince was accompanied by the British National Anthem as the line of automobiles passed beneath the bridge connecting the two buildings of the department store.

Although the route of the party had not been previously published, crowds lined the sidewalks along Fifth Avenue, were bunched about the entrance of Central Park and cheered the visitor as he was recognized, entering from the park at 110th Street.

The crowds were dense in the neighborhood of Grant's Tomb, where the auto paused long enough to permit the party to alight, then encircled the granite structure and prepared for the return trip. The prince, carrying a wreath in his right hand, disappeared into the clubhouse of the tomb and bowed his head as he placed it upon the tablet that marks the resting place of the Civil War hero.

Another wreath was placed at the foot of the mounted figure of Joan of Arc at Eighty-eighth Street and Riverside Drive. Hundreds of school children sang as the prince climbed the stairs and returned to his machine.

At the Columbia Yacht Club the prince reviewed a group of grinning Boy Scouts, who made up Troop 211, and Graham, Scoutmaster. Donald Michie, wearing a blue sash, took the name of the prince and smilingly acknowledged the complimentary remarks of the royal reviewer.

The party then boarded the royal barge again and its nose was turned toward the Renown, where the prince already had interested the crowds, as it towered above the little destroyers clustered about it. The barge moved toward the battle-cruiser to the accompaniment of a booming salute gun.

Among those who lunched with the prince aboard the Renown were Mayor Hylan, Secretary of State Hughes, Rodman Wanamaker, Grover A. Whalen, Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes, Police Commissioner Enright, Major General David C. Shanks and numerous other American and British officers of both branches of the service.

The prince had exchanged his colonel's uniform for the blue and gold of a captain in the navy, and with his fair hair and smooth, ruddy face, looked more boyish than ever.

On the deck in front of his cabin on the Renown he received reporters of the New York papers after luncheon, shaking hands with his left hand with a

Go Back to Congress

If Fifth District Wants Pro-German, It Is Entitled to Him, He Declares

Special Correspondence
MILWAUKEE, Nov. 18.—Declaring if the 5th Wisconsin District wants a pro-German representative in Congress it has a right to have one, Victor Berger, came back to-day from Washington and started his fight for reelection to the House of Representatives. His nomination papers were put into circulation at once and Berger intends to carry them to Madison himself to-morrow. In a statement he said:

"I am pro-German, pro-English, pro-French, pro-Polish. In short, I am pro-humanity. Even if the 5th Wisconsin District wants a pro-German representative it has a right to have him. And since the 5th Wisconsin District wants to be represented by a Socialist it has the right to be represented by a Socialist. The 5th Wisconsin District cannot permit the 325 lawyers, little and big, in Congress, to dictate to the 5th Wisconsin District who is to represent it."

Indict Clothing Workers
For Strike Conspiracy

Manufacturers Said to Have Paid Officials More Than $100,000

CHICAGO, Nov. 18.—Indictments were voted late to-day against six officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, who are charged with having obtained money from clothing manufacturers by means of extortion and the levying of "fines" in the settlement of strikes.

Four clothing manufacturers are said to have testified that they paid more than $100,000 to representatives of the organization.

The men also are charged with issuing boycotts and blackmail orders against certain firms and individuals, with conspiring to commit a felony, malicious destruction of property and the maiming and disfiguring of persons.

223 Traffic Cases in Day

Traffic Court records were broken yesterday when Magistrate House, assisted by Magistrate Mancuso, heard 223 cases. The fines aggregated $5,566.

Prince Proud To Be Citizen

The Prince of Wales, in responding to the reception tendered him at City Hall yesterday, spoke of his delight in visiting America and of his pleasure in having the freedom of the city conferred on him. Following addresses of welcome by Mayor Hylan and Secretary of State Hughes, for the city and state, he said:

"I am very proud to have been made a freeman of the City of New York, and I thank you most sincerely for the high honor which you have conferred on me. It is a happy coincidence that the last recipient of this honor was Albert, the King of the Belgians, our honored ally to whose vision and courage in a grave time of trial the cause of freedom owes so much."

"I have already the privilege of being a freeman of the City of London and it is a special pleasure to become a freeman of the City of New York, because London and New York, both great business centers, are so closely connected with the business of the world. Upon the stability and prosperity of these two great cities depends to a great degree the welfare of all countries. Were their inter-communication to cease for a single business day the affairs of the entire world would be upset."

"I feel I am not a stranger in America. I already have many American friends and I learned to know and appreciate America through the splendid officers and men I met in the fine divisions you sent overseas and in your excellent battle squadron."

"Now that I am here, and I have looked forward to coming for a long time, I find that I like the United States even better than I had anticipated, and I know that I was going to like it very much indeed. I am looking forward most keenly to the many pleasures and engagements which you have so kindly planned for my first visit to New York."

An eventful evening was the meeting in the lobby between General Pershing and the prince. They shook hands, chatted for a few seconds and the general was invited to spend the rest of the evening in the royal box. He previously had been in Otto H. Kahn's box. The prince sat between Mrs. Grover Whalen and General Pershing for the finale.

The most dramatic moment of the evening was when Florence Easton, holding aloft the Union Jack, sang "God Bless the Prince of Wales." The prince stood with bowed head through the singing, but straightened rigidly to attention for "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Mr. and Mrs. Otto H. Kahn's guests were Mrs. E. M. House and Miss Maude and Miss Margaret Kahn in Box 14.

In Box 32 were Mrs. R. Livingston Beekman, Mr. and Mrs. D. Laney Kountze and Mrs. Ward Douglas.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas A. Brady had with them Mr. and Mrs. John D. Ryan, Miss Betty Jackson and Miss Katherine Ryan.

With Mr. and Mrs. John T. Pratt, in Box 27, were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Pratt, Hon. Pierre Legh and Captain Wallace.

In the fourth box were Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. Hugo, Mr. and Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker and Mr. and Mrs. Grover Whalen.

In Mrs. Vanderbilt's box were Admiral and Mrs. Niblack, Mr. and Mrs. Lanier Winslow, Major and Mrs. Sharpe and Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Watson.

In Mr. Kahn's box were Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Chilton, Vice-Admiral Morgan Singer, Commodore Charlton and Captain Fletcher.

In Clarence H. Mackay's box were Miss Mackay, Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Davidson and Captain Blake.

In the directors' box were Commander Legare, Lieutenant Colonel Thorne, Captain Kennedy and General Peyton C. March.

New Faces in Parterre Row
The regular boxholders were well represented, but the parterre row presented a changed appearance. Once Monday night, for the three boxes in the center were turned over to the Prince and members of his party. They were No. 31, belonging to Mrs. Vanderbilt; No. 32, owned by Henry Reese Hoyt and Miss Rosina S. Hoyt; and No. 34, owned by Mrs. James B. Haggin. Reginald C. Vanderbilt represented his mother, had Frederic A. Juilliard's box, No. 2.

With Brigadier General and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt in Box No. 2 were General Pershing, Mr. and Mrs. M. Orme Wilson Jr., Miss Grace Vanderbilt and Miss Mary Wiborg.

Round of Cheers at Metropolitan
Brings Blush to Prince's Cheeks

Not all the brilliancy and formality of a gala occasion in the Metropolitan Opera House served to turn the Prince of Wales into a stiff or conventional young man. One of the most distinguished audiences ever assembled in New York was swept away by spontaneous enthusiasm over his display of modesty and boyishness at the special performance given in his honor last night.

As he stood in the rear of the box at 10 o'clock, heard the strains of "God Save the King," saw the vast sea of faces turned toward him, felt thousands of pairs of eyes focused upon him, he hesitated, took a step backward and finally walked to the front of the canopied box in the center of the house.
